

Which page(s) did you manually test this week?

I manually tested the homepage and one additional page from the site (such as a services or contact page) from the Jacksonville, Ohio website.

Which manual method did you use (keyboard, screen reader, etc.)?

I used keyboard-only navigation (tab, enter, shift+tab) and also observed the site using a screen reader to understand how content is announced to users.

One thing you observed that automated tools would not detect:

I noticed that some links and buttons were unclear when read out loud by the screen reader, making it confusing to understand their purpose. This is something automated tools usually don't catch because they don't fully evaluate user experience or context.